One of the first things you need to understand about depression, is that it is different from regular sadness [6]. Furthermore, depression does not limit itself to your mental functioning, it has plenty of behavioral aspects [7] as well. Knowing how terrible depression makes you feel, it may be hard to believe that in some ways, it can also have benefits. [8]

Once you have learned about the most essential components of depression, you can start setting goals for improvement [9]. The first task before you, is to create an activity list [10] and start engaging in healthy coping mechanisms.

Time to Start Coping!

Depression is a vicious cycle [11], which you need to break, in order to become free, productive and happy. That is easier said than done, since this mood disorder has certain tricks to keep you in its trap [12]. However, a psychotherapy technique, called the ABC model [13] is a great way to facilitate your battle with depression. You can then start to substitute negative, self-defeating thoughts, [14] with more positive and realistic statements.

You are now ready to start transforming yourself from a negative, depressed individual, into a goal-oriented optimist. [19] Although that is not a simple task, mental imagery [20] can be a wonderful tool to speed the process along.

Now that you have learned and achieved so much, you can go back and evaluate your symptoms [21], once again, to pinpoint your strongest suits, as well as some areas for improvement.

For Better Results

You can create a positive influence on both your mind and body, by engaging in walking meditation [22]. An even better way to boost the results, which you have already achieved, is by spending time with animals [23]. Not only is their presence calming, but it can also serve as a preventative measure, for some mental health issues.

Treating your depression cannot be isolated to therapeutic techniques. It also needs to involve healthy lifestyle changes. [24]

If you are here because you'd like to help someone who is struggling with depression [25], remember that you and your loved one are stronger than the depression, when you are united.
