Writing any academic paper, in whatever discipline, can be an extremely daunting task. Here we have provided some guides about how to write the various styles and formats of papers, as well as tips on article writing.

1. Plan Your Time
   - Time management is the single most important factor. Failure to leave yourself enough time will, at best, lead to a rushed paper, at worst lead to a missed deadline.
   - For a very important paper, you can always ask somebody else to proof it for you, making sure that the language is perfect.

2. Choose a Good Topic
   - Start broad – write out all of the easy points first and construct the body of the article. If you do this you can then refine it into the final draft.
   - You can always ask your instructors for a topic, or list of topics to select from, and you will have to do some research to find the topic.

   - Don’t worry too much about the exact language of the thesis statement, at first, as long as you don’t dramatically change your mind.
   - Whether your instructor gives you a week, a month, or 3 months, you need to make sure that you plan your time. Give yourself plenty of time to write your research paper, and it will be easier to write.
   - A robust plan and a well-structured thesis statement should be broad enough to give you room to maneuver, but concise enough to show that you have a good understanding of the topic.

4. Excellent Sources
   - Make sure that you integrate plenty of papers and articles. This is especially true if you are doing a literature review or research paper. For in depth information, we have plenty more resources.

5. Layout and Outline
   - The outline should include the main points of your research. This section may need to be refined and changed as you write.
   - For a narrative paper, you may decide to use a chronological outline. For an argumentative paper, you may decide to take it point by point, delivering an argumentative thesis. For an informative paper, you will need to outline where you will begin and where you will end.

6. Leave it
   - It is important to make sure that you have a good array of up-to-date and relevant sources. Comparing Japan, a modern society with an insatiable appetite for technology, against a society that has little need for technology, shows that technology cannot always be regarded as a force for good.

7. Proofread
   - With these tips on article writing in hand, you are now on the way to writing the perfect article. But are also going to give some general tips on article writing. These are useful for any type of paper in single source blocks.
   - Sometimes, you will be given a topic, or list of topics to select from, and you will have to do some research to find the topic.
   - Coming back to the importance of time management, once you have your first draft complete, you should leave it and come back for fine-tuning. You can run a spell-check and then submit your paper to your teacher.

8. Conclusion
   - There is nothing wrong with this, and it shows that you have the intellectual honesty to look at the evidence and change your mind when necessary.

Links

[1] https://explorable.com/tips-on-article-writing
[8] https://explorable.com/write-a-research-paper